

Tough action on preachers of hate

Coming to the UK is a privilege and it is right that we refuse to extend that privilege to individuals who abuse our standards and values and undermine our way of life.

There should be no place in our society for people who encourage violence or preach hatred.

So I support Labour's tough new measures brought in this week to stop people who encourage extremism or hate coming into our country.

Through these tough new measures

we will stop those who want to spread extremism, hatred and violent messages in our communities.

Our message to people like radical hate preacher Omar Bakri Mohammed is clear: You are not welcome here to spread your lies.

For the first time we will name and shame preachers of hate publicly.

And to help others we'll share our list of people with other countries to help them decide who should be banned from their countries too.

Supporting our armed forces

Labour has announced over £700 million for new armoured vehicles to support our Armed Forces.

The package will pay for some 700 new armoured vehicles to further improve the safety and protection of troops on operations in Afghanistan. It includes £350 million for 400 brand new armoured support trucks which will be used to accompany patrols and carry essential supplies such as water and ammunition.

This week's multi million pound package shows that we are responding to new and changing threats on the ground and will provide our serving personnel with the highest levels of protection and mobility that technology will allow.

Under scrutiny...

George Osborne is the man the Conservatives would put in charge of our economy.

But ever since the banking crisis hit Britain, he has been out of his depth.

Each time he has faced a tough decision, his judgement has been wrong.

Nowhere is this clearer than in his approach to the global financial crisis:

- opposing Labour's action to protect people with savings in Northern Rock and secure the wider economy
- opposing Labour's action to safeguard Bradford and Bingley and stop the danger from spreading
- opposing Labour's Banking Act, which took the action needed to maintain stability

George Osborne has a flair for catching headlines. He has said that high petrol prices are a "scandal".

But on the very day he called for petrol prices to be lower, his own policy would have put petrol prices up by 5p per litre.

While Labour is freezing fuel duty for a whole year, George Osborne would have raised fuel taxes - hitting families and businesses hard at the most difficult time.

George Osborne's schoolboy errors and lack of judgement show why this is no time for a novice.
